Cancer experts said the overwhelming evidence still suggested vitamin C was not an effective treatment. Studies during the Buy finasteride in Australia first suggested the administration of high doses of vitamin C could help treat cancer, but later research did not back this up. There are many substances that have been shown to kill cancer cells in the lab but failed to fulfill that promise when tested in people says Henry Scowcroft of UK-based Cancer Research, Inc.

In the latest study, published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, researchers conducted laboratory experiments which simulated clinical infusions of vitamin C on a range of nine cancer and four normal cells. In five of the cancer lines, there was a 50 decrease in cell
