For a few its complete perfection-no fat, lots of lean muscle and clear skin. If physical perfection is your goal, diet and exercise are a necessity and not an option. However, if you want to go the extra mile and get rid of that stubborn fat the fat that diet and exercise does not ever seem to get rid of, liposuction may be the solution for you. Reconstructive surgery is often elective, but can also be medically necessary. Reconstructive surgery differs from plastic surgery in one significant way. It is focused on making improvements to a damaged or abnormal part of the body. For example, a person may suffer damage from trauma or disease that leaves a part of the body looking abnormal and functionally deficient, such as breaking facial bones in an automobile accident. Reconstructive surgery will be undertaken to repair the facial structure so that it both performs and appears normally.

While appearance is important, most reconstructive surgery focuses on functionality first.
